OMEA--THE OREGON MUSIC EDUCATION ASSOCIATION

Publications Guidelines for Authors

OMEA--The Oregon Music Education Association established its publications program to expand and enhance the knowledge of its membership and to advance the cause of music education. OMEA encourages the submission of manuscripts on all phases of music education in schools and communities, including professional philosophy and practical instructional techniques (but not method books), the arts and arts education as a whole, and current issues in music teaching and learning.

OMEA copyrights its publications for the protection of its authors. Portions of the publications may not be reproduced or reprinted without permission from OMEA.

Royalties are not paid for published contributions. All authors receive copies of their publications, and they may order additional copies at a reduced rate.

Submission of Manuscripts

Send electronic submissions to oregonmusicdirector@gmail.com as a single file in WORD DOC/DOCX format. Subject line: OMEA Submission, year, month and the primary author’s last name. Authors should retain a digital copy to ensure against loss.

The editor will acknowledge receipt of every manuscript. Once the editorial staff has reviewed the manuscript the editor will contact the author to let them know if the manuscript was accepted for publication.

Preparation of Manuscripts and Articles

It is the author’s responsibility to cite all material from other sources; liability for failure to cite published sources lies with the author. Citations must include name of author and publication, city and state of publication, publisher, volume, number, and issue (if applicable), and pages cited. Omission of this information will delay publication. To use previously published music or long quotations in the text, permission must be secured from the publisher. It is the author’s responsibility to obtain permission and send a copy of the written permission to OMEA. The author should copyright original music before publication. OMEA adheres strictly to the U.S. Copyright Law and carefully guards against any infringement of this law.

Manuscripts should adhere to recommendations made in the Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association (6th edition, 2010). Please check your manuscript carefully for adherence to style, clarity, and accuracy, before submitting work to the journal. The manuscript text should be double-spaced using the 11-point Arial font. Total length of the article, including figures, drawings, tables and references should not exceed 10-12 pages. At the beginning of the article list; name of the article, author’s name as you would like it to appear in the publication, institutional affiliation, and email address. If the manuscript is based on a thesis or dissertation, please include a full bibliographic citation of the original work.

Photographs and graphics from authors that complement the content are always welcomed. Please attach photos and graphics as black-and-white JPG or TIFF (at least 300 DPI) files with your manuscript or article email. Tables and figures should be designed so that they will fit the page size of the journal, approximately 4.5 inches wide by 7.5 inches high. Please use an 8-point Arial font in tables and figures. All figures or drawings need to be in JPG or TIFF format. Please do not include photos and graphics these within the article. Graphics and photos are the responsibility of the author. All photos become the property of OMEA.

Editing and Production

Once a manuscript is accepted for publication, the editor enters it in the publications schedule. Depending on the length and complexity of the manuscript, the time limitations of OMEA staff, and the current work load, the manuscript may be published in three to eight months. OMEA staff members edit manuscripts to conform to recognized principles of English usage and guidelines of the Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association (6th edition, 2010).

The editor may also make small changes to the documents; if the document changes are extensive the editor will return the documents to the author for approval prior to publication. All necessary content changes will be made if the manuscript is returned to the editor by the stated deadline. These revisions may involve condensing the manuscript, rearranging the parts for improved sequence, adding stronger passages, sharpening the focus, or re-titling the work.

The editor will make every effort to ensure that researched material and facts are correct, but the author has final responsibility for accuracy. All design decisions regarding format, font, presentation, artwork, color, and photographs remain with the OMEA staff.
